HealthYes! brings mobile screening to Houston

Austin Business Journal

HealthYes! has expanded to the Houston area.

The Austin-based mobile medical screening provider says it will begin holding preventive screening events in Houston starting Feb. 4. The company launched less than a year ago offering screenings to detect problems such as heart disease, arterial disease and osteoporosis. It expanded to San Antonio last fall.

The company will offer the public 20 preventive screening events per month in Houston and the surrounding area throughout 2009. A package of screenings costs less than $200, according to HealthYes!

“Our expansion to Houston and the establishment of a Houston-based team is an exciting turning point for our organization,” Dale Wood, co-founder of HealthYes!, said in a statement.

HealthYes!’s initial team in Houston is composed of six technicians and sales executives. The company anticipates employing a total of 12 people in Houston by the end of the year.
